THE SCHOOL

The Concept of education dates back to the very first, humans ever to inhabit Earth, As just like animals, cavemen and women saw the need to pass their skills, Knowledge and values to the next generation to help them survive. Bus as time passed and a more complex society formed, humans understood that it would be better to have a small group of wise adults teach a larger group of children about various subjects and just, like that, the concept of the school system took birth. But, the early school were more focused on developing combat skills and passing religious beliefs rather than teaching advanced subjects like we learn today. And it continued to to do for thousand of years. But in the mid 17th century, with the rise of the age of enlightenment, people started to realize the importance of exploration through reading, writing and mathematics. These new age ideas became so popular the tin 1642, Masschusetts became the first colony to make basic education a requirement

American politician named Horace Mann, who became the secretary of education in Massachusetts in 1837. After he visited Prussia and saw its education arrangement, he set forth his vision for s system of professional teachers who could teach students an organized curriculum of basic content. For this reason, Mann is often called The father of the common school movement.
